Care for booze on the beach?

Review looming. Advocacy group backs pilot project to allow drinking by the water in select locations

KATE WEBB
kate.webb@metronews.ca

Public drinking and intoxication is already legal in Germany, the United Kingdom, New Zealand and Japan — so should B.C. follow suit and end the days of covert liquid picnics?

A Vancouver advocacy group calling for responsible reform of B.C.'s liquor laws certainly thinks so. It is anxiously awaiting the start of a review of provincial laws so it can pitch the idea of a pilot project to legalize drinking on select Vancouver beaches.

Jeremy McElroy with the Campaign for Culture says the strongest argument for letting people enjoy adult beverages on beaches and in public parks is that they're already doing it.

"People do it quite frequently, especially in the summer," he said.

"What ends up happening is ... the police end up spending time patrolling the beach, looking through coolers and searching adults for liquor, something they're legally able to purchase at stores, legally able to consume in their own homes and licensed establishments, and it really ruins that experience."

For the first time since 1999, his idea may actually have a shot at becoming reality.

That was the last time the province held a comprehensive review of liquor policies.

Richmond-Steveston MLA John Yap, parliamentary secretary to the attorney general and minister of justice, has been mandated by the premier to immediately begin looking at ways to modernize B.C.'s liquor laws, and he is open to suggestions.

"In the coming months, I will begin reaching out to stakeholders and the public to hear from them directly," Yap told Metro in an email. "We're also working on a new website that will allow the public to engage with us directly on their ideas."

Vancouver police Const. Brian Montague says 766 $230 tickets were issued to adults for consuming liquor in public last year, and 13 to minors.

Montague insists police have a lot of discretion in handing out fines for public drinking and tend to only do so if there is a public disturbance or the potential for one.

Activist hopes current pot laws go up in smoke

Challenge. Dana Larsen has gotten approval for a petition to decriminalize marijuana in B.C.

ELIZABETH HAMES
vancouver@metronews.ca

A B.C. marijuana activist has been given the green light to petition for the decriminalization of the illegal drug.

Elections BC said Thursday it will issue Dana Larsen a petition for an amendment to the B.C. Police Act, which would prohibit police officers from making arrests for pot possession. The amendment would not affect laws around trafficking.

If Larsen's petition receives enough signatures, the amendment, called the Sensible Policing Act, could go to a provincewide referendum in September 2014.

"This confirms that B.C. has the power to decriminalize marijuana in this province," said Larsen, a director of the Sensible Change Society, which is behind the Sensible B.C. campaign to decriminalize marijuana.

In addition to decriminalizing marijuana, the Sensible Policing Act aims to call upon the federal government to repeal marijuana prohibition and establish a commission to determine regulations for cultivation and sale in B.C.

Larsen said polling indicates majority support for decriminalization in every major demographic in B.C.

"They don't want that (marijuana) to be the focus of police resources," said Larsen, explaining the popularity of decriminalization among British Columbians.

It costs the province an estimated $10.5 million per year to bust pot smokers, said Larsen. Moreover, regulation of cultivation and sale of the drug could generate millions of dollars for the province, he added.

Dana Larsen speaks at the 4/20 rally outside the Vancouver Art Gallery in April 2012. KATE WEBB/METRO

However, Larsen said the largest challenge in the fight for decriminalization won't be convincing British Columbian's it's a good idea.

"Winning the election is the easy part," he said. "The hard part is getting the signatures and getting on the ballot."

The Sensible B.C. campaign will have just 90 days beginning Sept. 9 to collect the signatures of at least 10 per cent of registered voters in each of B.C.'s 85 electoral districts, about 400,000 people, said Larsen.

Although Larson's petition application is the ninth approved by Elections BC since 1995, only one such petition has ever garnered enough signatures to bring a legislative proposal to a referendum: The petition for a referendum on the HST.

Suspect turns self in after cyclist killed

Ed Simpkins, 72, was described by his sister as a beloved father, grandfather and cyclist. METRO

The alleged driver of a car that hit and killed avid cyclist Edward Simpkins has turned herself into police.

The 29-year-old woman's name has not been released as police have not yet decided on what charges to recommend.

Simpkins, 72, was riding down 13th Avenue at Wright Street on the evening of June 30 when he was knocked off his bike at relatively low speed. Police have not detailed the nature of his injuries but he died a short time later.

His family issued an emotional appeal for the driver to come forward last Friday, which she did on Monday, said Staff Sgt. Major John Buis.

"She did the right thing and came in earlier this week after seeing media coverage where police and the family appealed to her to come forward," he said, adding that the family is "relieved."

"We're appreciative of her co-operation, and the media's assistance in this investigation."

Police are still appealing for a witness to contact them who stopped behind the driver right after the crash and then reversed out of the quiet residential area.

Buis said it is possible the witness did not realize that they had seen a fatal accident and just wanted to get where they were going, but police still need to talk to them.

The witness' vehicle is described as a grey or possibly brown four-door hatchback, and was in the area around 8:30 p.m.

Anyone with information is asked to phone Burnaby RCMP at 604-294-7922.

All you need is love — and cash — for Hollywood church spruce-up

Project. Congregation continuing its efforts to give old cinema site a thorough restoration

More online

For more information, visit churchatthehollywood.ca/love.

For five weeks last summer, churchgoers transformed Vancouver's dusty and defunct Hollywood Theatre into a house of God.

When word got out that the Point Grey Community Church (PGCC) had found a new home in the long-empty cinema, 60 members came with mops, brooms and buckets, shampooing the red velvet seats and sweeping cobwebs off the Italian-made curtains.

"It was a labour of love," said Church at the Hollywood (formerly PGCC) representative Sarah Kift, noting the theatre's cleaning regimen had been neglected long before it shut down in May 2011.

Now, the growing congregation is looking to show the building's facade the same love by restoring it to its 1935 condition.

But love doesn't come cheap.

The full project — from painting the building to its original cream and red, to repairing the neon "Hollywood" sign that lit up West Broadway for decades — will cost an estimated $20,000.

The Love the Hollywood campaign has already raised about $2,000, and Benjamin Moore has agreed to donate the paint, said Kift. To raise the remaining funds, the church is calling out to the broader community to lend a hand.

"With $20,000 we're confident we can completely restore it," said Kift. "If we raise more than that, it will only become a better restoration."

The Church at the Hollywood currently leases the building, which means the congregation could be uprooted from its historic home at any time at the whim of the owners. But the church is committed to its role as servants of this legendary Vancouver landmark.

"Not everybody agrees with having a church here, but the overall feeling is that everyone loves this building and recognizes the heritage of it," said Kift. "We feel we are able to steward that, for at least as long as we can."

The Church at the Hollywood will host the first of many fundraisers Aug. 2 and 3, when it shows Back to the Future on 35-mm film. Opening night will feature live '50s-style entertainment and a DeLorean will be on display.

Admission is by donation, with a suggested amount of $10 per person. All proceeds will go toward the restoration, which Kift estimates will be completed by Christmas.

Clark looking for 'low-maintenance' digs in Kelowna

Premier Christy Clark is making plans to set up house in her new riding of Westside-Kelowna after getting a resounding show of support from voters in Wednesday's byelection.

The premier took in 62 per cent of voter support, allowing her to enter the legislature after losing in her home riding of Vancouver-Point Grey in the May general election.

In Kelowna on Thursday, Clark said she has already been on the Internet looking for a home but would also like to hear from anyone in real estate about a home that requires low maintenance.

"I have a cat, but I won't be bringing her. So no pets, no smoking and low maintenance," she said.

Quoted

"I think the market's good; it's a buyer's market. And you know the riding is really getting stoked again, so I want to make sure I get in before prices start to rise."

Premier Christy Clark on her search for a home

The premier told reporters at her victory party on Wednesday night that she didn't want to be "presumptuous" and start looking for a house while she was campaigning, but she's getting serious now.

Clark said she thinks her perspective may change with the change in location and it was important to have a premier from outside the Lower Mainland.

"I think it really changes the way we govern, and that's been a real learning experience and I hope it will be an important change in how I govern in the next four years."

Also on Thursday, Clark made a $1-million funding announcement for improvements to a stretch of road on the west side of Okanagan Lake.

The winding road snakes around the lake and can be dangerous.

"We're going to keep working until we can say that Westside Road is as safe as it is scenic," she told reporters who had gathered for a news conference.

The premier said the funding was on top of the $10.3 million already spent on the road's improvements since 2008.

Rescue

Hiker praised for planning ahead

A hiker rescued this week from a remote alpine trail near Tumbler Ridge is being praised by the RCMP for doing everything right.

The experienced adult male hiker was found Monday with a broken ankle by a search-and-rescue crew after he activated his SPOT emergency beacon.

The beacon can be programmed to contact the police or family and friends on a person's behalf, even from very remote locations.

Not only was the hiker equipped with supplies and emergency equipment, but the RCMP say he had discussed his itinerary with family and friends, which was invaluable when formulating a rescue plan.

The hiker was extracted by helicopter and transported to a Tumbler Ridge health centre.

He was released soon afterwards.

Chilliwack

Abduction charge dropped

An abduction charge against a man accused of trying to leave an apartment complex in Chilliwack with a four-year-old boy this week has been dropped.

Instead, Crown counsel will ask a court to forbid 41-year-old Jonathan Landsman from contacting the child or his caregiver.

Landsman appeared in court on Tuesday to face the allegation, but RCMP say the Crown has determined there is not enough evidence to indicate that Landsman tried to abduct the boy.

Man missing after jumping in river to evade police

A man who jumped into the Columbia River in Trail after escaping from a second-floor window to evade arrest is missing and presumed drowned.

RCMP say 28-year-old Andrew Evans was wanted on several arrest warrants and numerous attempts to locate him led police to the house from where he fled.

Const. Dan Moskaluk says that while officers were speaking to an occupant on the main floor, Evans ran upstairs and jumped out the window. Mounties stationed outside were unable to stop him before he dove into the river.

A rescue boat searched the river to the U.S. border without success.

No rain ... no fog ... this is B.C.?

Vice magazine comes calling.

Local photographer wins recognition for 'wonderful' landscapes

vancouver@metronews.ca

When Vancouver photographer Tristan Casey got a call from Vice Canada last month, he thought someone was playing a joke on him.

"Honestly, I didn't believe them," Casey, 29, said when the magazine requested an interview.

But a month later, congratulations started flooding in: His dreamy scenes of British Columbia's backwoods were featured on Vice's website under the headline "Tristan Casey's photos make B.C. look like the Earth's most wonderful place."

Casey's work captures a side of the province that is rarely associated with the notoriously rainy West Coast. Against a backdrop of blue, cloudless skies, he photographs his friends splashing in the waves, scaling mountains and taking in sunsets from grassy hilltops.

"In my perspective, all I see is summer," Casey said. "I see the surfing, I see the hiking, the swimming. I see beaches when I think of Vancouver."

Although Casey grew up in Vancouver, he moved to Europe after high school and later to Toronto. But the years away made him want to rediscover his home province when he returned at 25.

Two weeks after his arrival, his friends invited him camping in Squamish. The hilltop site where they pitched their tents "had the most gorgeous view I'd ever seen," he said.

From behind his lens, he has been journeying to B.C.'s hidden corners ever since. On any given weekend, he and his friends will take off on bike, foot or ferry — usually venturing no farther than a few hundred kilometres from downtown Vancouver.

"Vancouver's situated an hour from every desirable land form," Casey said, citing the wealth of islands, mountains and beaches nearby. "We, as a city, are a hub for exploration."

Exhibition on the way

To view more of Tristan Casey's work, go to tristancasey.com or stop by the Positive/Negative Gallery during the Capture Photography Festival in October. The show, titled Asleep in Your Branches, will feature Casey's best photographs of coastal B.C.

Residents recall fatal landslide one year later

Jillian Madill can still remember moving into her dream home almost three decades ago: a 100-year-old log cabin on 17 acres in Johnsons Landing, B.C.

She said it was "the most gorgeous log house that you've ever seen," and she and her husband, John, could not have been happier.

But she and her husband will never live there again. Their home was destroyed by an avalanche of mud and debris that buried their tiny community one year ago Friday.

Four of the community's 35 residents died, and four other houses were wiped out.

"To just lose it in a blink of an eye like that — it's taken us a while to come to terms," Madill said.

A landslide struck Johnsons Landing last July 12, killing three residents. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The landslide tore through Johnsons Landing in mid-morning, thundering down the mountainside before spilling into Kootenay Lake.

Richard Ortega was standing outside the community retreat centre he co-founded, chatting with a neighbour, when the ground started to shake.

"There was this giant rumble, and we all looked up," he said. "It sounded like a freight train coming down, except you could hear trees snapping and boulders rumbling.

"It was less than 60 seconds for the entire event, and when it stopped, the world was completely still. There wasn't a bird chirping or a bee buzzing. Nothing. Everybody was in shock," he said.

A report on the disaster released in May said the landslide was caused by heavy rain and a late-spring snowmelt that set off the largest slide to hit the region in an estimated 12,000 years. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Deemed a homicide

Man found badly beaten in Surrey has died: Police

A 55-year-old man who was found beaten in his Surrey home on Sunday died Wednesday, and police have deemed his death a homicide.

Scott Ashley McMillan was rushed to hospital after his roommate found him unconscious on the floor of their home on 64th Avenue.

Integrated Homicide Investigation Team spokeswoman Sgt. Jennifer Pound said McMillan had a criminal record dating back to 1985.

No arrests have been made in his death.

"IHIT is in the process of identifying persons of interest and conducting interviews in order to determine what lead up to this murder and who is responsible," she said in a statement.

An autopsy is scheduled for this week. KATE WEBB/METRO

Oath to the Queen of Canada 'repulsive'

Forcing would-be Canadians to pledge allegiance to the Queen before they can become citizens is discriminatory and a violation of their rights, three permanent residents are set to argue in court on Friday.

The Citizenship Act requires applicants for citizenship to swear or affirm they will be "faithful and bear true allegiance to Queen Elizabeth the Second, Queen of Canada, her heirs and successors."

The requirement "effectively bars" the applicants from enjoying citizenship rights such as voting or obtaining a Canadian passport given their constitutionally protected beliefs, their application to Ontario Superior Court states.

One of the applicants, Michael McAteer, says his father was persecuted in Ireland for supporting Irish independence.

"Taking an oath of allegiance to a hereditary monarch who lives abroad would violate my conscience," McAteer says.

Michael McAteer, one of three disgruntled would-be citizens. CHRIS YOUNG/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Simone Topey says swearing allegiance to the Queen — whom Rastafarians regard as the "head of Babylon" — would violate her beliefs.

Dror Bar-Natan maintains the Queen is a symbol of entrenched privilege and taking the oath would be "repulsive."

For its part, the federal government argues that the three are in Canada voluntarily, and their political and religious views enjoy constitutional protections.

That they cannot have the "convenience" of a Canadian passport or the right to vote is a small price to pay for adhering to their principles.

"It is not constitutionally inconsistent that the applicants who find Canada's foundational democratic political structure to be 'repugnant,' at least in parts, are not accorded the right to vote within that political system," it states.

"The inability to enjoy the benefits of citizenship ... are amongst the costs reasonably borne by individuals whose personal beliefs run counter to Canada's foundational heritage." THE CANADIAN PRESS

$2.3 billion under

Defence budget not fully spent

New figures from the parliamentary budget office show National Defence has not spent billions of dollars set aside for it during the last budget year, a continuing trend some consider deficit slashing by stealth.

Retired lieutenant-general Andrew Leslie said the pattern is either a matter of managerial incompetence or a deliberate policy.

"If it is deliberate, the government of Canada needs to explain why." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Drug trade. Canadian crooks dealing directly with Mexican mobsters

Canadian organized-crime groups have forged links with Mexican outlaws in an attempt to secure a direct supply of cocaine and increase their profits by eliminating the middleman, says the RCMP.

An internal analysis by the Mounties notes that since 2008 at least 10 Canadians have been shot or killed in Mexico under circumstances suggesting involvement with local criminal elements.

Some were known to be active in drug trafficking in Canada and all had extensive criminal backgrounds, says the RCMP analysis.

A copy of the May 2012 assessment — heavily censored — was released under the Access to Information Act.

The murder in Mexico of several Canadians with criminal connections may signal that Canadian disputes and retaliatory actions are making their way south — contrary to the popular perception that drug cartel frictions are migrating north, says the RCMP's companion report. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Train engineer a hero or criminal?

Lac-Mégantic disaster. Man hailed for valiant actions now suspended and under suspicion

His face gripped with terror, the train driver sprang out of bed at the inn where he'd retired for the night and raced to the scene of an impending catastrophe.

Residents of Lac-Mégantic, Que., painted a portrait Thursday of the friendly railman who chatted with locals during his regular stopovers in town.

An employee at the inn says she thinks she was looking into his eyes the instant he realized his unmanned, crude-oil-filled train had just slammed into the downtown core.

The train driver, Tom Harding, now finds himself at the centre of the investigation into a derailment disaster now feared to have killed 50 people.

His boss has said he could face criminal charges.

The chairman of the rail company has suspended Harding without pay amid concerns that he might not have properly applied the brakes on the tanker train.

The company had initially described Harding as a hero for apparently rushing to the scene where he managed to pull some of the explosive rail cars away from the flames.

A taxi driver met Harding on Friday night at the spot where he parked the train before it roared into town. He said his regular customer seemed fine.

However, Andre Turcotte did say that the train appeared to be belching out more smoke than usual, so much so that he recalled oil droplets from the exhaust landing on his car.

He said he asked Harding twice about the smoke. Turcotte said his client calmly responded that he had followed company directives to deal with it. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Leave him alone

"I imagine it's not his fault. In the meantime, he needs support — he doesn't need harassment.... And if it's his fault, listen, he will pay for it, for sure."

Taxi driver Andre Turcotte, who has transported engineer Tom Harding from the train to the inn once or twice a week for the last four months.

Walmart denies firing woman over dog rescue

Hot dog. Former employee says she was told she was fired for 'being rude to a customer'

JOE LOFARO
Metro in Ottawa

Following an incident where one its employees in Kemptville, Ont. was fired after confronting a customer who left his dog in a car on a hot morning, Walmart Canada says it will install signs in its parking lots across Canada warning shoppers about the dangers of leaving children and pets in hot vehicles.

Carla Cheney with her dog Chico
JOE MORIN/METROLAND NEWS SERVICE

Walmart Canada issued a statement on its Facebook page just before noon Thursday saying that it is major supporter of animal rights and denying the termination was over the employee's move to confront the customer.

"We want you to know that the associate in question was absolutely not let go for trying to help a dog in a locked car. The decision to dismiss an associate is one that we take extremely seriously and must follow a comprehensive process," the statement said. "As per our protocol, the store manager did speak to the customer in question about the dangers of leaving a dog in a hot car."

The former employee, Carla Cheney, a pharmacy technician, said she called police Tuesday when she saw a man leave his dog in a truck in the parking lot. She said the SPCA had advised her to call 911 after a similar incident that happened at the store a week earlier.

We liked their early stuff better? Belugas to see another concert

Two Winnipeg artists are on the northernmost edge of Manitoba this summer to organize a concert series that promises to really whale.

Laura Magnusson and Kaoru Ryan Klatt left for Churchill last week with a specially crafted "sculptural sea vessel" — complete with a stage and an underwater speaker system — to stage performances for thousands of beluga whales on the Churchill River estuary.

"We're fostering ties between humans and belugas," explained Magnusson, who's travelled with Klatt to Churchill for the past two summers to sing and talk to whale pods.

"This is the last hurrah."

Top court to hear cell privacy case

Ottawa. Man arrested for armed robbery says police breached his rights by examining his phone

The Supreme Court of Canada is taking on the question of whether police can access information on a cellphone that isn't protected by a password.

The court has agreed to hear an appeal from Kevin Fearon, who was arrested after an armed robbery in Toronto in 2009.

Police obtained photos of a gun and cash, as well as a text message about jewelry, after taking a closer look at Fearon's phone, which was unlocked. After he was convicted, Fearon appealed, arguing that police breached his rights when they examined the phone after his arrest.

The Ontario Court of Appeal said it was all right for the police to look through the phone in a cursory fashion to see if there was evidence relevant to the crime, but after that they should have stopped to get a search warrant.

Had the phone been password-protected or otherwise locked to anyone other than its owner, "it would not have been appropriate" to look through the phone without a search warrant.

The appeal judges referred to a decision in a murder case in which the judge did not allow evidence from a personal electronic device because it "functioned as a mini-computer," which has a high expectation of privacy.

The contents of that device were only extracted by a police officer using specialized equipment, the judges noted.

"There was no suggestion in this case that this particular cellphone functioned as a 'mini-computer,' nor that its contents were not 'immediately visible to the eye,'" the court said in its ruling.

"Rather, because the phone was not password-protected, the photos and the text message were readily available to other users."

Defence lawyer Sean Robichaud said that approach failed to take into account the amount of information many people keep on their cellphones these days.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

No explanation

- As usual, the Supreme Court justices gave no reasons for agreeing to hear the case.
- Kevin Fearon also appealed over the issue of access to a lawyer, saying he was left in an interview room for five hours without an opportunity to contact counsel.
- The Supreme Court, however, said the appeal will be limited to the cellphone issue.

Royal-kid kitsch. Souvenir makers ready for mad dash

Souvenir plates to mark the forthcoming birth of a baby for Prince William and his wife Kate, Duchess of Cambridge, stand on display in a shop in central London on Wednesday. SANG TAN/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's a royal bonanza — but for Britain's souvenir makers, also a royal headache. The upcoming birth of Prince William and his wife Kate's first child is a golden opportunity that comes with a mystery: The name and gender of the baby.

While merchants have known for months that the future heir to the throne is due in mid-July, they'll be sent into a mad dash to create, or at least put finishing touches on, royal baby memorabilia.

Sophie Allport, a designer of fine bone china, is one manufacturer waiting for the future monarch's name to send her commercial plans into motion. She has thousands of pre-orders for hand-crafted commemorative mugs but can't fill them until the baby's name can be etched on the rims.

She's as ready as she can possibly be — having prepared both blue and pink designs depending on whether it's a prince or princess. "We've never done something like this so I hope it works," said Allport, whose designs, once finished, will be scanned, mailed or even driven by courier to the city of Stoke-on-Trent, the centre of Britain's ceramic industry.

1 Pocketful o' change. Stephen Harper's cabinet shuffle reminds me of a time when you could take a $50 bill and change it into a stack of $1 and $2 bills so that you felt a little bit richer. Even though you still only had $50.

2 Cool cats. Last December, a man in Windsor, Ont., was found with 155 dead cats in his freezer. This week, Jerry Miernecki pleaded guilty and was banned from owning more than one animal, which must be spayed or neutered. And one year probation, because they'll want to keep an eye out for odd behaviour.

3 Miseducation. Remember Lauryn Hill? The reclusive Fugees star left showbiz in 2000 due to the overwhelming pressure, but collected over $1.5 million US in royalties between 2005 and 2007 for which she failed to file income tax. Hill is serving a three-month prison sentence, followed by 90 days of house arrest concurrent with one-year parole. And, on top of that, all of her pets must be spayed or neutered.

4 Ice, ice baby. Homegrown cutie, Elisha Cuthbert, married Maple Leafs' captain Dion Phaneuf this week. Women across the country talked and tweeted about how beautiful she looked in her dress, while male hockey fans imagined the opposite.

5 Go West. Following Armenian religious tradition, Kim Kardashian is keeping herself and Baby North at home for 40 days, or as she puts it, half a marriage-length.

7 King's crown. This week in 1954, a 19-year-old employee of The Crown Electric Company in Memphis, Tenn., gave his notice after signing a contract with Sun Records. Elvis had previously been told by local auditioners to keep his day job. He would arguably become the most influential cultural icon of the 20th century. Perseverance powers helicopter

Toronto team takes international prize

Two Toronto engineers have just finished setting up their prize-winning helicopter that is powered by Todd Reichert's powerful legs pedalling a bicycle.

Since 1980, a challenge to engineers across the world — to build a human-powered helicopter, capable of sustaining three metres of flight for 60 seconds — had remained unclaimed.

Teams of engineers from Japan to the U.S. came close, but not close enough. Only Reichert's team has fulfilled the seemingly impossible feat, earning it a $250,000 prize Thursday. The award-winning flight took place in June, after 18 months for the University of Toronto alumni to build and fine tune the project. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Crowdfunding site Kickstarter is making its way across the border later this summer — but just 'cause us Canucks can't start our own funding projects yet, doesn't mean we can't contribute. Since Kickstarter is generally home to the nerdy entrepreneur, we sorted through what new tech they're coming up with. (So you don't have to. You're welcome.)

Plug:

With files stored all over the place from the cloud to your smartphone to your laptop, plug aims to centralize all your info — the brain of your personal info operation if you will. $69 on Kickstarter, $150 retail once it's made.

Wrist Charge:

No more missed texts from dead phones. No more tangled wires. Wrist Charge looks like one of the slash bracelets from the 90s (these ones aren't fluorescent, don't worry) and uses any USB port. $15 on Kickstarter, $29.99 retail.

C.24 Music Keyboard for iPad:

You might not need your iPad to turn into a keyboard, but you might as well. This keyboard acts as a case for the iPad and with the flip of a lever it turns into a piano keyboard. $99 on Kickstarter.

Synopsis

Grown Ups 2 picks up where the last movie left off. Lenny (Adam Sandler in his first ever sequel) has relocated his wife (Salma Hayek) and kids back to his hometown to be closer to friends and family. It's the last day of school, and as the kids are packing up their books, their fathers (Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade) grapple with growing up, growing old and a gang of frat boys who think the four old friends are way over the hill.

RICHARD CROUSE AND MARK BRESLIN

Adam Sandler's comedy Grown Ups 2 opens this weekend. HANDOUT

It's more number two than it is number one

New movie. In the sequel to Grown Ups, the comedy doesn't grow into anything and remains a series of juvenile jokes and potty humour

Richard: Mark, the old saying, "They got bigger, but they didn't grow up," perfectly applies to this new Sandler and Company movie. It's 90 minutes of middle-aged men, urination gags (too many to count) and cleavage shots. So while the actors may have matured (chronologically at least) the jokes haven't. Question is: is it funny? I didn't really think so, although I have to say Shaquille O'Neal's big-guy-Andre-the-Giant shtick made me laugh. You?

Mark: No, I didn't laugh. But let's examine the inventory. Chris Rock may be the funniest stand-up working today, but as a movie star, he's never done anything much worthwhile.

David Spade: Tommy Boy was a long time ago.

Sandler: Well, I only find him funny when he's trying to be serious.

There is only one movie genius here — I'm not kidding — and it's Kevin James. He's the only one of the bunch that can convincingly play a regular guy and not come off like a slumming millionaire. And even then, not in this turkey.

Also you might have to wonder about any sequel that Rob Schneider passes on.

RC: I wondered where Schneider's character was. I guess some friendships don't last forever. I can't say I didn't laugh at all.

James' deadpan dumb kid who can't add or spell is a pretty funny running gag but for a movie about growing up, it was all so juvenile. I didn't expect a searing meditation on aging but I did think they might touch on the fact that they were growing old with more smarts than lines like, "I used to buy 10 cases of beer for my parties, now I get 10 cases of juice boxes."

MB: A good line. I snorted in recognition. And I grudgingly laughed a bit at a few sight gags, like the exploding life raft and some of the '80s outfits at the party finale. But generally, the humour aims too low. But I liked it — if I can use the word — more than the first one. At least it had some nice callbacks and weird twists of coincidence. And it had a lazy summer quality about it, probably the result of lazy screenwriting, acting and direction.

RC: I like silly movies, I just wish it was silly and about something other than a moose urinating on Sandler's unsuspecting family, and by extension, the audience.

MB: We should all feel lucky. In the first draft of the script, it was the other way around.

Science Fiction

Pacific Rim

Director. Guillermo del Toro

Stars. Charlie Hunnam, Idris Elba, Rinko Kikuchi

Director Guillermo del Toro has made an end-of-the-world scenario fun. In Pacific Rim the planet is threatened by Kaijus, colossal beasts with an appetite for destruction. Giant robots called Jaegers, operated by pilots like Raleigh Becket (Charlie "Sons of Anarchy" Hunnam) are the last hope to fight the beasts and save the world. Add to that Ron Perlman in a colourful cameo, huge-scale martial arts and some crazy Roger Corman-esque science theories and you can expect to have a geek freak-out. RICHARD CROUSE

Comedy/Drama

The Way, Way Back

Directors. Nat Faxon, Jim Rash

Stars. Steve Carell, Sam Rockwell, Liam James

This new dramedy starring Steve Carell, Sam Rockwell and Canadian actor Liam James sets the story in a beach resort where an introverted 14-year-old is trapped in a world of adults. It doesn't add anything new to the coming-of-age genre, but what it does, it does really well. The movie's main strength lies in the interesting way the characters interact. It's more than just another study of awkward teen behaviour. It's a sweet movie with genuine laughs. RICHARD CROUSE

Conjuring up old-school horror

Patrick Wilson. The actor chats with Metro about his latest horror flick, which was a throwback to the '70s

When it comes to discussing contemporary horror movies, "restraint" isn't usually a word that comes up too often.

But it's one that actor Patrick Wilson keeps coming back to when describing how director James Wan (Saw, Insidious) approached The Conjuring, based on a case file by real-life paranormal investigators Ed Warren (Wilson) and Lorraine Warren (Vera Farmiga).

There's a lot of restraint in how the film sticks to its time period, feeling very much in mood and style like a 1970s film.

James said that to me very early on. It was the '70s without hitting people over the head — with bell bottoms or an episode of Partridge Family or something. Yeah, it's in the '70s and you've got '70s clothes, and you've got the odd "groovy" that the kids say — which they would — and I think it gives people a little frame of reference, but it's not blatant.

It's refreshing to see the older style of making scary movies is still effective.

No disrespect to horror movies from the past 15 years, but when people say, "What are the great horror movies?" you're always drawn to the Exorcist — that movie always comes up as one of maybe three or four that are arguably the best. Those are movies that are rich in character and not overly graphic. The violence is used appropriately, the blood is used appropriately. And I think James has a real affinity for that, which I always admired, especially coming from Saw. He almost started this whole movement, I feel like, with the shock and the gore and everything. But one of the things that struck me about (our previous collaboration) Insidious was the complete opposite of that. And now he's just really hit his stride.

What's in store at summer's hottest comic geek-fest

Comic-Con. The annual event showcases the latest in film, TV and general geekery

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D. CONTRIBUTED

July means one thing for the entertainment industry: Comic-Con. Here's what we're geeking out over this year at the annual pop culture smorgasbord in San Diego.

Marvel: The comic book movie juggernaut never ceases to impress in San Diego, and hopefully this year will be no different. We're looking for updates on Avengers 2 as well as the upcoming Captain America and Thor sequels. Plus, wouldn't it be awesome if they brought out the whole cast of Guardians of the Galaxy, their bizarre new super-team movie?

X-Men: Days of Future Past: It feels like it's been forever since Fox has mounted a Hall H presentation for Comic-Con, but this year they're back. Mum is the word on what will be presented, but we have it on good authority something will be done to celebrate the impending release of the Wolverine. More importantly, we're hoping for an update from Bryan Singer on his return to the X-Men franchise.

Godzilla: With Pacific Rim putting giant, city-destroying monsters back in people's minds, the time is right to re-introduce the original kaiju, Godzilla. The reboot, starring Aaron Taylor-Johnson, Ken Watanabe and Elizabeth Olsen, has just started filming, so hopefully there will be some monster-sized surprises in store.

Agents of S.H.I.E.L.D.: We may have to wait until summer 2015 for Avengers 2, but Marvel is helping make that wait go faster with this TV spin-off, overseen by Joss Whedon himself. It's easily our most anticipated show of the fall season. And maybe we'll finally learn how Clark Gregg's Agent Coulson — who appeared to have perished in the Avengers — factors into the new show.

Doctor Who: We're halfway through the venerable British sci-fi series' 50th anniversary, so expect big things — especially with current Time Lord Matt Smith bowing out later this year. That makes this his last Comic-Con as Doctor Who, so hopefully he'll make the most of it.

A modern twist

Superheroines get a hipster makeover

Artist Elizabeth Beals (society6.com/ElizabethBealsPrints) is giving superheroines a modern look by turning them into their hipster selves. The illustrations of the DC female protagonists — Diana Prince (Wonder Woman), Harleen Quinzel (Harley Quinn) and Selina Kyle (Catwoman) — look like they would be at home in an episode of Girls. While to the naked eye they may seem like your average 20-something, little nods to their super personalities present a fun new take on these classic characters. METRO

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Halle Berry ALL IMAGES GETTY

Low key wedding bells imminent for Berry

Halle Berry will reportedly marry her fiancé, Olivier Martinez, this weekend, according to E! News, though the location of the event is still a mystery. Berry and Martinez were spotted flying out of LAX earlier this week with Berry's daughter, Nahla, in tow. If Berry's interview with InStyle last year is any indication, it will be an intimate ceremony. "I do know it will be very small," she told the magazine. The couple, who have been engaged since March 2012, are expecting their first child together.

LeAnn Rimes

LeAnn laughing her ass off at pregnancy rumours

Country singer LeAnn Rimes finds Star magazine's claims that she's expecting a baby with husband Eddie Cibrian hilarious. "(Laughing my ass off,) Star magazine," she tweeted in response to the story. "I don't know if you (doctor) the pics or pick the worst one you can find, but I'm far from pregnant and just dropped a jean size."

The Word

King of Queens star leaves Church of Scientology

MELINDA TAUB
Metro World News in New York City

King of Queens and The Talk star Leah Remini has left the Church of Scientology. Apparently Remini, who has been a member of the church for many years, grew tired of the organization's habit of cutting off ties with people it deems "suppressive."

"It all began when Leah questioned the validity of excommunication of people," a source told the Post. "She is stepping back from a regime she thinks is corrupt. She thinks no religion should tear apart a family or abuse someone under the umbrella of 'religion.'" Apparently, at Tom Cruise and Katie Holmes's wedding, the actress asked politely where church leader David Miscavige's wife was. It must have been a loaded question, because Remini was slammed with years of auditing and "thought modification." Remini is reportedly considering going public, but wants to wait and see what the church is going to do, since they're rumoured to harass those who try to leave.

Remini can stay at my place if she needs to hide out. I am a strong supporter of religious freedom for sitcom stars.

Angelina Jolie

War, what is it good for? An Angelina Jolie movie, apparently

Angelina Jolie has her second project as a director all lined up. The actress and activist will be taking on Unbroken, a Second World War drama about former prisoner of war Louie Zamperini, according to Yahoo News. "I've had the privilege of spending a great deal of time with Louie Zamperini, who is a hero of mine, and now — I am proud to say — a dear friend," Jolie says in a statement. "I am deeply honoured to be telling his extraordinary story, and I will do my absolute best to give him the film he deserves." Oscar-winners Joel and Ethan Coen are writing the script, and Jolie was spotted in Hawaii this week scouting locations. Jolie's first film as a director, In the Land of Blood and Honey, was released in 2011.

A crispy nacho is a happy (tasty) nacho

Corn and Steak Grilled Nachos. When they're nuked in the microwave, these little guys die a soggy death. Save a nacho from this sad ending with your barbecue

Before turning on the grill, make sure the baking sheet you plan to use fits on it with the lid down. If it doesn't, you can divide the ingredients into multiple smaller pans. The smaller pans also can be cooked in batches, if needed.

1. In a medium bowl, whisk together the adobo sauce, tomato paste, oil, garlic powder and salt. Add the steak and mix to coat thoroughly. Cover and refrigerate for at least 20 minutes and up to overnight.

2. When ready to cook, heat the grill to medium-high.

3. Rub the corn with a bit of canola oil, then set it on the grill. Cook the corn, turning often, until lightly browned on all sides, about 2 to 3 minutes. Transfer the corn to a plate and set aside until cool enough to handle.

4. Meanwhile, use an oil-soaked paper towel held with tongs to coat the grill grates with oil. Add the steak and grill for 1 to 2 minutes per side, or to desired doneness. Transfer to a plate and set aside. Leave the grill on, but reduce the heat to low.

5. Arrange the tortilla chips in an even layer on a rimmed baking sheet. Spread the steak evenly over the chips.

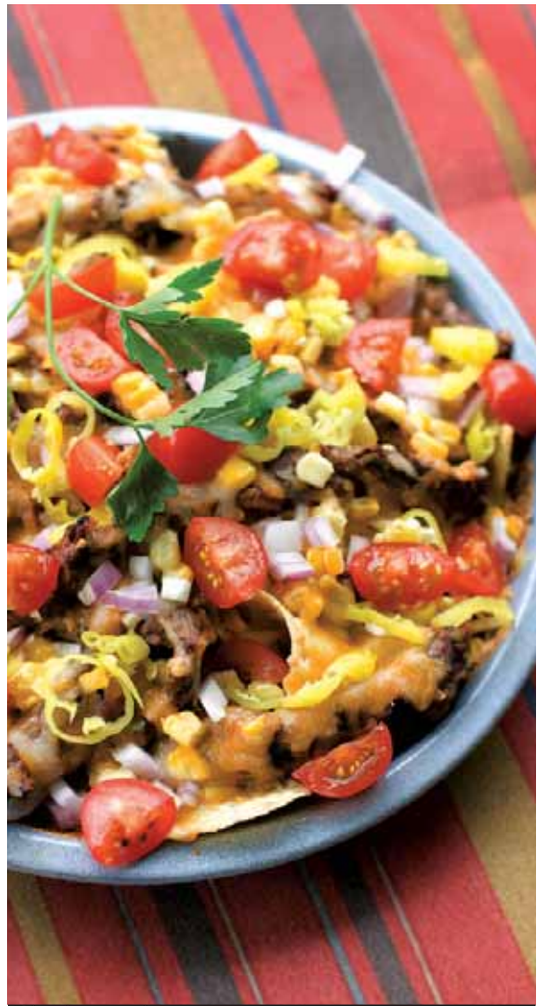
6. Cut the corn kernels from the cobs. To do this, stand the ear on its wide end, then use a knife to saw down the length of the sides. Scatter the corn kernels over the steak and chips, then scatter the cheese over that. Set the baking sheet on the grill, cover the grill and cook for 7 to 10 minutes, or until the cheese is melted.

7. Remove the baking sheet from the grill, then scatter the tomatoes, pepperoncini and diced onion over the other toppings. Serve immediately.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ingredients

- 3 tbsp adobo sauce (from a can of chipotle chilies in adobo)
- 3 tbsp tomato paste
- 3 tbsp canola, plus extra
- 1 tsp garlic powder
- 1 tsp kosher salt
- 9 oz beef sirloin, thinly sliced (can substitute pre-sliced "stir-fry" beef)
- 1 ear corn, husked
- 11-oz bag corn tortilla chips
- 1 cup grated cheddar cheese
- 1/2 pint cherry tomatoes, cut into quarters
- 1/3 cup pepperoncini, stemmed and thinly sliced
- 1/2 small red onion, diced



This recipe serves six. THE CANADIAN PRESS H/O

Sorry, spirit fans, you don't have the monopoly on mixology. Innovative wine lovers have been adding extras to vino for centuries, creating inspired alternatives to drinking it neat.

The Spanish came up with the idea of sangria: A blend of red wine, liqueur and fruit named after their term for blood because of its dark colour. Arguably the first wine cooler, Canadians are just cluing in to how easy it is to make — not to mention how well it goes with summer menus.

My basic recipe is meant to be played with, so have fun experimenting. Use whatever fruit turns you on (I start with watermelon, blueberries and raspberries) and an inexpensive Spanish red or a value-priced, fruit-forward alternative like Lindeman's juicy 2012 Cawarra Shiraz Cabernet ($8.95 to $10.99) from Australia.

Peter's Simple Sangria:

- Ice cubes
- 750 ml chilled red wine
- 100 ml orange liqueur
- 500 ml gingerale
- 200 ml lemonade
- Fruit
- Sugar

Grab a clear glass pitcher and toss in some ice cubes. Add all the liquids, then the fruit. Stir. Give it a sip and add sugar to taste. Enjoy!

Kovalchuk walks away from deal with the Devils

Ilya Kovalchuk considered staying in Russia when the NHL lockout ended in January. Ultimately he returned to play with the New Jersey Devils.

But on Thursday, Kovalchuk made official what the Devils knew was a possibility since then.

The Devils announced that Kovalchuk is returning home and retiring from the NHL. The final 12 years and $77 million US of his contract were voided, and Kovalchuk is free to play in Russia's KHL.

"Though I decided to return this past season, (general manager Lou Lamoriello) was aware of my desire to go back home and have my family there with me," the 30-year-old said in a statement. "The most difficult thing for me is to leave the New Jersey Devils, a great organization that I have a lot of respect for, and our fans that have been great to me."

Riders rough up Argonauts

Darian Durant threw three touchdown passes, including two long ones to Taj Smith, to lead the Saskatchewan Roughriders past the Toronto Argonauts 39-28 on Thursday.

Durant cemented the win at the Rogers Centre with a 70-yard TD strike to Smith at 6:51 of the third quarter to put Saskatchewan (3-0) comfortably ahead 29-14. Durant also found a wide-open Smith on a 61-yard touchdown pass in the opening half.

Friendships on hold as Lions travel to Alberta

CFL. B.C. takes on Edmonton Saturday

cam.tucker@metronews.ca

The Lions face former teammate, and current Eskimos starting quarterback, Mike Reilly on Saturday in Edmonton.
AARON LYNETT/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Ask some members of the B.C. Lions what they think of Mike Reilly and they gush about how much they love and respect their former teammate.

The Lions traded Reilly to the Edmonton Eskimos in January.

He was capable of being a starting quarterback in the CFL, but that was never going to happen in B.C., not while Travis Lulay was standing behind centre, hence the change in address for Reilly.

On Saturday, the Lions face Reilly and the Eskimos in Edmonton.

The Lions already faced Reilly and the Eskimos in the pre-season, so the initial shock of him in a different uniform — he spent the past three seasons in Vancouver as a back-up — has worn off.

But still, it's the first time members of the Lions will face their old teammate in a regular-season game. Two points are on the line.

"We had that initial feeling in the pre-season," said Lulay, following practice on Thursday.

"Now, it's all business. He's a good friend, but you want to play good against your buddies."

In two regular-season games as the Eskimos' starter, Reilly has experienced the highs and lows the position can offer.

In Edmonton's season-opening loss, Reilly completed just 17 of 35 pass attempts, and if that wasn't bad enough, he tossed three interceptions.

A week later, in the midst of a torrential downpour, Reilly had an efficient outing considering the elements, throwing a pair of TD passes in Edmonton's win over the Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

The Lions know Reilly as a confident and cerebral QB with a strong arm.

"It's for real now. The bullets are live," said Lions veteran defensive back Dante Marsh.

"He's an excellent quarterback, he's a good athlete, he's a tremendous guy as far as leadership. He's running the show in Edmonton."

There's also no denying he was a popular figure amongst his former teammates, but their affections for Reilly will temporarily cease for a few hours on Saturday.

Love lost, for a while

"I love him to death. But for 60 minutes, I don't like him."

Lions DB Dante Marsh on former teammate and Eskimos quarterback Mike Reilly.

Jackson subbed in for injured Gore

B.C. Lions receiver Shawn Gore will not play Saturday against Edmonton, as he continues to go through the CFL's concussion protocol.

- Gore took a helmet-to-helmet hit from Toronto Argonauts defensive back Janzen Jackson last Thursday.
- Fellow non-import receiver Paris Jackson will take Gore's place in the Lions offence.

Green excited for chance with AHL Utica

Being from British Columbia, the next step in Travis Green's coaching career carries added significance.

With more than 1,000 regular-season and playoff games of NHL playing experience from 1992 to 2007, Green is now the head coach of the AHL's Utica Comets, the Vancouver Canucks' top affiliate.

Green, who hails from Castlegar, B.C., signed a three-year deal with the Canucks, after first meeting with members of the organization informally at the NHL draft last month.

He met with Canucks brass again last week for more serious discussions.

"Being a B.C. guy that grew up here, I'm very proud and excited," Green told reporters at Rogers Arena, while Canucks prospects took part in a scrimmage Thursday afternoon.

Home province pride

"Personally, being from B.C., it's extra special."

Travis Green, new coach of the Canucks' minor-league affiliate Utica Comets.

"Growing up watching the Canucks, being a big fan of them and from a professional career, to get this opportunity, I'm real excited about it."

Green began coaching with the Portland Winterhawks of the WHL in October of 2008.

He was an assistant coach and assistant general manager back then, but was suddenly put in the role of head coach and general manager in November of this past season.

That's when the WHL suspended then head coach and GM Mike Johnston for the remainder of the season, fined the team $200,000 for what the league called violations related to player benefits.

Green helped guide the Winterhawks to a berth in the Memorial Cup championship game in May.

"I went to Portland to learn how to coach," he said.

"I wanted to make sure I was ready to take the next step and I think I'm more than ready now."

Red-hot Whitecaps welcome Fire to BC Place Stadium

The Vancouver Whitecaps have won five of their last seven matches, and will look to continue their run of excellent play when they host the Chicago Fire at BC Place Stadium on Sunday.

The Whitecaps are coming off a historic Cascadia Cup derby match last weekend against the Seattle Sounders FC, and have moved into the fifth and final playoff spot of the Western Conference thanks to their play since the beginning of June.

The Eastern Conference Fire comes to Vancouver with a record of 6-8-3, but with four wins in its last six games. METRO

Would-be Canucks get cooking at prospects camp

NHL. First-rounder Shinkaruk has some aspects of professional life mastered already

CAM TUCKER
cam.tucker@metronews.ca

BRUCE BENNETT/GETTY IMAGES

The jump from junior hockey to the NHL presents challenges not only on the ice, but off it as well.

Cooking and preparing meals, for instance. The introduction to professional hockey, and living on your own, can be a rude awakening when it comes to something as seemingly basic as preparing dinner.

But not for Hunter Shinkaruk, a first-round pick of the Vancouver Canucks in the 2013 NHL draft.

Shinkaruk and his fellow prospects were given cooking classes during prospects camp this week in Vancouver.

This is where Shinkaruk might have a leg up on his peers.

"I lived with my mom in junior, but she made me cook three times a week," he said on Wednesday.

Shinkaruk was among 38 other prospects at camp.

Not only were they put through the paces on the ice, capped off with a scrimmage at Rogers Arena on Thursday, but they also did team-building exercises and took seminars on other aspects of life as a pro hockey player.

They did dragon-boating and hiked up the Grouse Grind. In addition to cooking class, they were educated in the various forms of social media and how to conduct themselves in that realm.

"You go to that rink and all of a sudden you're representing not only yourself, but the Canucks organization and the NHL," Shinkaruk said.

The Canucks took Shinkaruk with the 24th overall pick in this year's draft, after he was ranked sixth among North American skaters by NHL Central Scouting.

He scored 37 goals and had 86 points in 64 regular-season games with the Medicine Hat Tigers this season.

He's fast and skilled, and he'll be counted upon to bring those elements to camp in September. Do that, and he could be cooking his meals as a professional sooner rather than later.

"I'm an offensive player and I do bring excitement to my game. I'm just that kind of player," he said.

"I think that's something that, every time I'm on the ice, I have to bring because that's the reason why I've gotten here."

MLB. Davis' hot bat leads Orioles past Rangers

Chris Davis hit his major league-leading 34th homer to back a dominating pitching performance by Miguel Gonzalez, and the Baltimore Orioles beat the Texas Rangers 3-1 Thursday night to earn a split of the four-game series.

Davis snapped an 0-for-17 skid and reached career highs in homers and RBIs (86) with a second-inning solo shot off Ross Wolf (1-2). His 34 home runs are the most in the majors before the all-star break since 2001, when Barry Bonds had 39 and Luis Gonzalez hit 35.

Horoscopes

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
You are not usually the trusting sort but you seem determined to see only the best in people today. Good for you but don't believe everyone.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You have so much work to finish before the weekend that you may be at a loss to know how to get it all done. Don't worry, the planets will provide. All you have to do is make a start and then keep going.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Wherever you go and whatever you do today people will greet you like a long lost friend. You must be doing something right to get this kind of response, so carry on.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
It seems you have been rather obsessive about someone. For some reason you have been thinking about this person night and day. Is that healthy? Probably not. Think about something else.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
Friends will rally around and make life easy for you today. What have you done to deserve this kind of assistance? Probably nothing much but you do have a knack for attracting people.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
It might be wise to leave your credit card at home today because if you use it once you won't know when to stop. Use cash only and limit yourself to a certain amount. If you haven't got enough, too bad.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
People you do business with today may not be talkative but from the look in their eyes and the way they position themselves, you will know what they are thinking. You read body language so well.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
It's good to be open-minded but that does not mean you can allow people with silly theories to waste your time. The Sun in Cancer promotes broader thinking but some thinking is too outrageous to take seriously.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
No matter how vulnerable you may feel at the moment, you need to be around people because it is only through personal contact that you can rise above this negative phase.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Make a point of being calm today because what happens over the weekend will try your patience to the limit.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You are desperate to be on the move and will be impatient with people who think or act too slowly. Your journey will be a lot more pleasant if you relax and stop looking at your watch so often. Time doesn't matter.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
If you are confused about something, you must speak up. There is nothing wrong in admitting that you don't "get" it and it's unlikely you are the only one. You will be doing people a favour. SALLY BROMPTON
